A speechless Boris Tamarin expresses anger to four of his seven mute sons in this scene from "The Tender Grass," a Passover special to be presented Sunday at 12:30 p.m. on channel 4.

Social researchers trace Welfare progress in 60's

ANN ARBOR — The 1960s have been called a period of intensive social experimentation characterized by a new sensitivity to old problems of human distress.

A major area of his new sensitivity is described in "Federal Training and Work Programs in the Sixties" by Sar A. Levitan and Garth L. Mangum, a 465-page study published by the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University. The volume reviews the major federally supported manpower programs and presents a design for improving these efforts.

Levitan and Mangum, both faculty members of George Washington University, note that significant efforts have been made during the '60s to improve the quality and enhance the welfare of those who make up the nation's manpower resources. During this period there has been experimentation with almost every imaginable form of aid to the unemployed and underemployed.

"Though the underlying factors contributing to unemployment, poverty, and other social ills were closely interwoven," they add, "the Administration and Congress reacted to each problem separately on a piecemeal basis."

The resulting confusion of aims and results, the authors say, is typical of a period of innovation and requires no apology. Many people were helped. The authors suggest, however, that a period of "application and consolidation" is now in order.

They note that "none of the problems had been appreciably reduced. The period could be more appropriately described as an experimental one in which problems were clarified and potential solutions identified, but during which effective delivery of the needed services was not accomplished and resources never approached need."

The major accomplishment of the period was a shift in objectives, the report suggests. Transition was accomplished from the focus on aggregate levels of demand and employment fostered by the Employment Act of 1946 to concern for the employment obstacles faced by particular groups. "The trend is clear, but not yet achieved, toward alleviating the specific handicaps faced by individuals in the job market."

The ILIR publication states three challenges for manpower policy in the near future: to incorporate the lessons of present programs into a viable manpower program in aid of the competitively disadvantaged; to raise policy sights and aim to train workers not only for entry jobs but also for meaningful working careers; and to explore the interface between self-support and income maintenance as the nation, in its increased sensitivity to human distress, seeks to guarantee both employment and income.

The achievements and failures of the 1960s suggest long-term optimism and short-term concern, Levitan and Mangum conclude. "Legislators and administrators have thus far refused to consider the long-run objectives and strategic underlying effective manpower and antipoverty efforts. The target has more often been the next election with promised eradication of unemployment and poverty just around the next corner."

"The fact that concern continues amidst record prosperity and heavy international involvement," they say, "may be, in part, evidence that sympathy is deep-seated, but more likely proves that the programs have developed their own vested interests."

Namesake asked

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — The Albuquerque City Commission has passed a resolution calling on New Mexico's congressional delegation to exert an effort to have a ship of the U.S. Navy christened the USS Albuquerque.

"Perhaps a strong impetus for the continuation of the effort is that those left out in a period of record prosperity have begun to eschew docility and make their wants forcefully known. That so little has been achieved in a decade of unprecedented affluence and economic expansion may be discouraging."

But, Levitan and Mangum conclude, "considering that 200 years has been invested in the development of an educational system and 30 years in the development of a workable economic policy, the accomplishments of less than a decade of manpower policy do not look so bad."

The volume brings together a series of highly successful monographs, previously published by the institute, which discuss the evolution of existing manpower programs and appraise their achievements and shortcomings. In addition, much material has been revised and updated. The new materials and the added experience provide new insight into a design for improving the national manpower effort.

Let there be music!

By HUGH W. BENNEMAN
Michigan State Medical Society

The night shall be filled with music, and the daytime, too; music of the wind and the waves or train whistles. Both manmade and natural music.

Once the steam locomotive's voice, was the voice of westward moving America — wild, undisciplined, exultant. In the middle of the night that one-eyed fire-breathing dragon passing would send up his tragic wail, full of human grief, and a longing for something unnamed.

Things may have improved! The diesel locomotive of today sounds a musical chord.

Only yesterday, in the big American cities, church bells tolled out a call to prayer three times a day — at six o'clock in the morning, twelve o'clock noon, and six o'clock at night. But many cities passed ordinances forbidding that tolling and the cities lost touch with the poetry of it all. It seems they confused eloquent sound with noise.

Perhaps the most musical of all natural sounds is the sound of the surf, sometimes mighty as the voice of he organ pouring forth a Bach chorale, sometimes a chant, depending upon the tide. In the music of the surf you can hear all the musical devices the accelerando, the ritardando, the forte, the pianissimo. Let secular society try to pass effective ordinances against that kind of beauty of natural music!

Scientific-minded man is interested in music, too. At least sounds. On the bridge of a destroyer in World War II, I used sonar or sound equipment to seek out enemy submarines. In this apparatus, a loud speaker located beneath the ship would send out a sound wave which we would hear as a beep. If it hit an underwater object it would return as a second beep. The time it took to return and its pitch and direction would be interpreted to determine whether the object hit by the sound was going towards us or away from us and how far away it was and whether it was moving to right or left.

Yes, science uses sound for a completely different purpose than to delight the human ear.

As a matter of fact science is making one of many new approaches to sound in the development of a pyro-acoustic loud speaker. This is the use of flame as an amplifier for the production of intense sound. Experiments with this flame speaker have amplified the human voice to a loudness many times over what is possible with electrodynamic speakers of the same power.

There is need for extremely loud sound generators for testing equipment that will be exposed to intense sound waves, as in connection with jet engines, because sound can damage apparatus. Also an extremely loud speaker might be useful in disaster situations.

Come to think of it, science may be a little too advanced on this sound idea. Some orator might get hold of it: the result could be inhuman!

Stone still vital

ST. JOSEPH, Mich. (AP) — Man's most productive tool—the stone—still has a place in modern industry.

In a Bendix plant here, triangular sandstones and automotive disc brake housings are dumped together into a rubberlined chute vibrating 1,500 times a minute. The ensuing shakeup is violent enough to both effectively smooth out the 22 machined surfaced on each housing and wear out shoes at the rate of 27 pounds an hour.

Know what you mean But don't ever say it

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) — Spring is a good time to brush up on your double talk.

Our conversation tends to get a bit rusty during the long winter months, and if we're not careful we start saying things we really mean.

That, of course, can be socially disastrous. In our civilization only the very young and the very old are permitted to tell the truth at all times. The popularity of the rest of us depends largely on our skill at double talk, which is the art of saying one thing while thinking just the opposite.

Here are a few examples of double talk in ordinary life situations, followed by their hidden meanings.

"This is the best car on the lot. With proper care it could last you 10 years easy."—It will if you put it in the garage, jack it up, and leave it there.

"Is that really a denture, Fred? They look so real no one would ever suspect they were false."—I haven't seen teeth like that since the last time I went to a racetrack.

"I saved this steak especially for you, Mrs. Willingham. It does look a bit aged—but of course that simply makes it more tender."—It got lost in the display case two weeks ago.

"I could have got orchestra seats but I thought we'd have a better view from the balcony."—Why should I waste money buying orchestra seats for a dame like you?

 "Once I pick up a good book, I can't put it down until I finish it."—But if you don't bother to pick it up, you don't have to read it at all.

"Him? That's a laugh. Why, I wouldn't marry him if he were the last man on earth."—Besides, he didn't ask me to.

"Of course, I'm only offering you a suggestion, Jim. Feel perfectly free to do it anyway you want to."—But if you don't do it my way, you'd better start looking for a new job.

"It's such a nice night out, why don't we walk?"—He'll sulk the rest of the evening if I make him spring for a cab.

"Your speech really made our annual dinner a success, senator. I don't know when I've enjoyed a talk more."—I did get a nice long nap at that.

 "It has always been the policy of our publication to encourage struggling young authors." If you give them a pat on the back, you don't have to pay them so much.

"Our son has decided to take a year off from college while he decides what he really wants to do with his life."—He flunked out.

Thief is ethical

NEW DELHI (AP) — An elderly Brahmin nearly fainted when he was accused of running an unauthorized meat shop.

"Sir, punish me for whatever you like, but don't accuse me of meat-selling," the Brahmin pleaded to the judge. "I have never touched meat in my whole life."

It was eventually discovered that the Brahmin had been running an unlicensed sweet shop.

Orthodox Brahmins and other high-caste Hindus are usually vegetarian in their eating habits.

Record potpourri returns One hit, several good tries

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Sometimes record reviewers choose a subject—the Memphis soul sound, New Orleans jazz reissues, recitals by spinto sopranos—and listen to recordings that belong in that category, then write about them. Other times it's delicious to pick an album here and there from the garden of the many, many that are released and, by listening to a lot of them, come up with a small but very nice mixed bouquet.

No use to write about the albums that were checked and rejected—in our last potpourri sampling, we came up with one to really rave about and some others to recommend.

The rave is for "Mabel Mercer and Bobby Short at Town Hall" on Atlantic. It's a two-LP set taken from a May 1968 concert at New York's Town Hall, one LP by Mercer, one by Short.

This is elegant, sophisticated music, not outdated even though these two have been big names in popular singing for years.

Bobby Short is one of the warmest voices in all of singing. His "Looking at You" makes a listener feel wrapped in sable, with love. His feeling and timing on Jerome Kern's "Bojangles of Harlem" are superb; then he does Billy Strayhorn-Duke Ellington's "Something To Live For," with a warm throb and seriousness. With each track you're deciding that it's the best and worth the price of the whole album, then comes another like "Sand in My Shoes," evoking the tropical, which is even better.

Miss Mercer has less real voice left, but she has something very rare and precious that few of the young golden throats do. She knows how to use what she has for expressive storytelling. Classical singers often know how to do this, because of their formal training in projection, but people who listen to pop singers instead of classical get very few chances to hear it.

Her "Why Did I Choose You?" is poignant; "Jenny Rebecca," a welcome to a baby, is touching; "Season's Greetings," about all the greetings she won't be sending her former lover, is funny—but bittersweet.

She's at her best conveying a lived-through wisdom. "Children on the Carousel" says that children don't realize the carousel will stop. But instead of making that a bitter remark, the lyric admires it and Miss Mercer's voice admires it, as she asks, "May I ride with you?"

In spirituals — and there aren't many recordings of those coming out today—there is a splendid new one, "Holmes Sings Spirituals."

Baritone Eugene Holmes says about spirituals on liner notes, "I feel they're right for the quality, timbre and character of my voice." No one could phrase it more succinctly or accurately.

Holmes, who has sung in opera in New York, San Francisco, Seattle and with a traveling company, has a voice just perfect for "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," "Deep River," "Oh Didn't it Rain," "Were You There?" and others.

Rambling around in rock, we found "Give Me Take You," by Duncan Browne on Immediate. We don't know anything about the group except that three young men are pictured and Duncan Browne is listed as guitarist, vocalist and composer, with David Bretton writing words.

Sound is kind of peaceful old English—with acoustic guitar, bass, harpsichord. But the best and lyrics are of today, and the combination is engaging rather than pretentious. Some of the life ideas of today's youth are well-stated here.

"Ninepence Worth of Walking" stressed nonpermanence; "Dwarf in a Tree" warns not to question too much but to enjoy what you have while you have it.

Two seals are the titled players in this week's adventure in "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau," Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. on channel 7.

That was no lady— That was my SON

By HAL BOYLE
NEW YORK (AP) — Have you been embarrassed lately by mistaking a him for a her, or a her for a him?

Well, don't let it worry you. It's happening to everybody. Such mixups are quite normal, considering how much alike the two sexes think, talk, dress, act and look today.

It all started some years ago when the boys started imitating the girls. Now it is somewhat difficult to be sure who is imitating whom.

However, despite the present complexity of the problem, it is still possible for a careful student of human behavior to determine the sex of most of those he meets. There are always tipoffs of one kind or another.

Here are a few hints to guide the puzzled:

If it can hang by its heels from a playground iron bar, it's a boy. If it likes someone else to carry its books home from school, it's a girl.

Does it wear an itty-bitty watch surrounded by diamond chips? That's a young lady. Does it wear a larger watch with a metal or leather band? That's a young man.

If it can sew on a button without sticking the needle into its fingers, it's a woman.

If it complains about how tired it is from sowing wild oats, it's a man.

So it like a tuna fish or peanut butter and jelly sandwich for lunch? Chances are it's feminine. Would it rather have a ham and egg sandwich? Chances are it's masculine.

Does it rush out to the icebox to get a cold beer at every third commercial on a television program? That's the papa. Does it simply murmur acidly, "Sooner or later you're going to turn into a beer can"? That's the mama.

Choice of words is sometimes an indication. If it says it's going to work, it's a Joe. If, preferring to employ a euphemism, it says it "goes to business," it's a career Jane.

If it likes to gossip with its hairdresser while getting its tresses trimmed, it's a girl. If it closes its eyes and dozes the moment it sits down in a barber chair, it's a guy.

Does it count the years, months, days, hours and minutes until it will be able to retire? That's grandpa. Does it say in exasperation, "You know you'd never be happy just sitting around the house doing nothing"? That's grandma.

Academia is 'free'

By KARL MANTYLA

DETROIT (AP) — Who's griping about the high cost of higher education?

Not the students and faculty of Michigan's three "free universities."

Free, to them, means not only a way to learn what they want and how they want, but to attend classes without worrying about writing home to dad for more tuition money.

A free university at the University of Detroit is the largest in Michigan, with upwards of 300 or more students.

Others are operating at Michigan State University and the University of Michigan.

None of the students are graded. Homework is up to the individual. Text books usually are nonexistent and, in most cases, the class decides the directions of the course. If anybody wants a "diploma," he can pick up the sheepskin before or after the course and fill it in himself.

With no entrance requirements, anybody can attend the "university." Some are high school pupils interested in college campus atmospheres. Others are regular professors, priests, housewives, businessmen and campus hangers-on.

Though Michigan's free universities were established by disenfranchised students as a means of providing kinds of education drastically different from inside-the-university courses, they by no means are "anti-university" or "protest movements."

"These courses are meaty — solid. There's nothing trivial about them," says Thresea Church of Detroit, a 40-year-old mother of five. Mrs. Church "enrolled" in the U-D Free University this term for courses in Spanish Existentialism, Aristotelian Ethics and the Structure and Dynamics of Myth.

If those titles sound too esoteric, then there's something to appeal to the higher side: Photography, How to Build and Fly Model Rockets or Karate.

An attractively printed catalogue of the U-D Free University offers 35 courses this "semester."

Kinds of courses offered depend on how many students are interested and whether an instructor will donate his time free. Classes usually are held once or twice a week.

Frank Lucatelli, a moustachioed, 23-year-old senior majoring in urban studies at U-D, is the prime mover behind his school's free university.

"A lot of phenomenal things are happening," he said. "The free university is providing a place for people to come out in the open."

He cites as an example a chance meeting with a sculptor, Robert Youngman of Chicago, who was in Detroit on extended business.

"He had just arrived in town and was looking for something to do," Lucatelli said, so Youngman began teaching Experiments in Arts and Technology.

"It seems to be the way most of our classes get started. People have something to say, and they stop by and say it," Lucatelli explained.

Cautiously voicing approval of the free university concept, the Rev. Malcolm Carron, president of the University of Detroit, says, "There hasn't been any trouble and I have been interested in the students' ability to carry it on."

The key question on the future of the free university, he says, is, "Will the next person in charge have the enthusiasm and energy that Frank Lucatelli has?"

Father Carron, whose university is operated by the Catholic Jesuit order, says he insisted at the outset that the faculty have some voice in the free university's courses and instructors. He says a faculty committee offers suggestions to Lucatelli.

U-D, like Michigan State and U. of M., grants no credits for work done by its students in the free university. But a few professors at U-D are known to have accepted as part of regular course requirements work done by students in the free university.

John Mosher, a 28-year-old member of the U-D English Department, teaches a free university course on the "Esthetics of Pornography."

"I'm kind of 'anti' the whole structural device" of regular universities, Mosher said. "I was having classes at my own house to get away from that kind of thing."

He said most of the free university students are "very bright" and the informal classes appeal to students who are "tired of the structural hangups."

To Mrs. Church, the free university solves a "generation gap."

It "serves a great purpose to the whole community—if the people can wake up and take a look at it," she said.

Draw your conclusions—

By HAL BOYLE
 NEW YORK (AP) —
 Jumping to conclusions:

The office wolf is being replaced by the supermarket wolf. He prowls the aisles with his small shopping cart looking for new conquests. Why does he haunt the supermarkets? For the same reason that sailors in summer go rowboating in Central Park—because that's where the girls are.

If you want to be on the safe side, never buy a second-hand car from a salesman who wears a diamond ring.

If the pocket watch isn't going to stage a comeback, why do clothiers keep turning out suits with watch pockets in them? They are about as useless today as earmuffs on hens.

Girls who graduate from parochial schools have better penmanship than those who went to public schools.

People who voluntarily live in the suburbs are masochists. They complain about being prisoners of a railroad timetable, but actually they enjoy this form of punishment. In some mysterious way the suffering makes them feel noble.

I always wonder why pigeons like to hang around church steps but never stroll in and listen to a sermon. Perhaps it is because, unlike people, they lead such simple lives they don't need sermons.

Dana was first

The first known managing editor on any newspaper was Charles A. Dana, who served from 1846 until about 1861 as Horace Greeley's assistant editor on the New York Tribune.

Why is it that no airline hostesses have developed into champion long-distance runners? After all, many of them now dog trot from New York to Los Angeles on jet flights.

If it makes you uncomfortable to sit on the same park bench with two young lovers, you're probably over the hill yourself.

The fame of the pioneer isn't always lasting. Who remembers the first robin of spring after the fourth and fifth arrive?

Girls have got another reason today for wanting to get wed—so they'll have a man around the house to help them pull off those tight high boots which so many wear now.

 You can tell the quality of a restaurant by the cornbread sticks it serves. If they are fresh, tasty, and free from grease, you can bet your last dollar that the rest of the meal will be fine, too.

Experience is a priceless commodity, but nothing deteriorates in value more surely. No matter how much it cost you to acquire, you cannot leave it to your heirs and get much gratitude from them.

The guy who makes a point of always getting to the office five minutes early and leaving five minutes after quitting time will probably never become head of the firm. Anyone that cautious doesn't have enough adventure in him to become a leader.

Thomas Becket (Richard Burton) prepares himself for a martyr's death in a repeat screening of "Becket," Saturday, April 5, at 9 p.m. on channel 4.

Computer solves social ills

ANN ARBOR — Computer models can help solve many present social problems and provide an "early warning system" against new ones, Radio Corporation of America President Robert W. Sarnoff maintains.

Writing in the March issue of Michigan Business Review, published by the University of Michigan Graduate School of Business Administration, Sarnoff explains that statistical models can be created to illustrate nearly any community, social institution, or human enterprise.

These simulation models are proving particularly useful in evaluating social problems and projecting solutions for them.

In essence, the RCA executive says, simulation can function as a tool for social scientists in four ways:

1. It can provide statistical information that defines more accurately what must be done in a given situation. He explains: "Far too many social programs today are based on broad generalities: elimination of slums, better education, relieving racial tensions, improving our international image, and so on. While these phrases may describe the end result, they do nothing to pinpoint the causes.

"We must get past the vague aim of 'better education' and focus on the precise criteria in a given area which will help us achieve such a goal. By constructing a detailed computer model of the community or system in question, we may not only learn that a new school located in a particular community is one of these criteria, but we may also be able to determine just what ratio of students to teachers is necessary to obtain optimum effects."

2. Social simulation can provide planners with a series of alternatives rather than a single inflexible approach to a problem. While the building of a new school may be the most desirable improvement from a statistical point of view, there may be several reasons why it isn't feasible. Therefore alternate plans should be available to bring about the desired changes.

3. Simulation can provide estimates of costs and some indication of probable results of a given set of decisions long before a single penny or man-hour is committed to the project. If these estimates seem out of line the first time around, the computer can be used again and again, under varying mixes, to reach a balance between costs and goals.

4. The model constructed for the original simulation exercise can become part of a monitoring system after the actual project is instituted.

Used as a standard of performance measurement, the model can help to spot negative trends early enough to do something about them.

Sarnoff cites recent computer research in studies of national stability (the most stable country: New Zealand), crime control (violence results from a mix of many factors), and the effects of state decisions.

"It is still too early to gauge the full significance of efficacy of many of these efforts," he admits. "Obviously some experiments will fail for one reason or another — usually from lack of an adequate data base or from inability to use output information in a positive manner. Nevertheless, there is no question as to the potential of the technique — a potential to predict changes in social structures just as we now predict changes in business, economics, technical, and physical structures."

Simulation may make its greatest contribution, Sarnoff concludes, "in providing data that allow us to predict many urgent problems before they actually occur." This "early warning system" may help man to "move more swiftly and effectively than ever before in treating the great social and environmental problems," he adds.

SLATEDALE, Pa. (AP) — Like most 14-year-olds, Bonnie Blose likes to ice skate, bowl, ride a bike and swim. But for her doing these things represents a real achievement because she is blind.

The determined girl attends Slatington High School and keeps up with her sighted classmates, who guide her through the halls to classes.

All her textbooks are printed in Braille and members of the National Honor Society have volunteered to read library books to her. She is in the business education curriculum and earns above-average grades.
